The Standard.

For the Standard. LIEUT. SAMUEL PARK WEIR. Lieut Samuel Park Weir was killed in the battle of Fredericksburg, on the 13th of December, 1862. His name is now added to the roll of his country's fame, and to the list of her noble martyrs. The memory of his quiet and gentle life is enshrined in the hearts of all who knew him; and the influence of his pure and holy example still lives to beautify and bless the world.

He was born in Greensboro', N. C., on the 12th of October, 1839. His pious mother early dedicated him to God, who graciously accepted this offering of the holiest love. Like the prophet child of Shiloh, this little Samuel always loved the courts of the Lord's House, and entered its gates with thanksgiving and praise. The High Priest within the veil loved him so well that He has called him to join his sainted mother and cherub sister and brothers in the ministrations of the upper sanctuary.

At sixteen years of age he joined the Presbyterian Church, and the whole of his Christian course was indeed the "beauty of holiness." In meckness and humility he trod the "straight and narrow way that leadeth unto life;" and now he wears the crown immortal. He graduated at our University in June, 1860 .-His teachers and comrades will all say that he was a good and noble boy. His time at college was not spent in vain. He had acquired many of the treasures of learning and literature, and his cultivated mind was eager to follow still farther the shining foot prints of master spirits up the steeps of knowledge. When a mere boy he felt it to be his duty to become a minister of God. In September, 1860, he entered the Theological Seminary, at Columbia, to prepare himself for that position of honor and useess. In mind and heart he was well suited for his high calling. How tenderly he would have watched over the people of God, and the lambs of their household. How earnestly he would have called sinners to repentance, and pointed out the way of salvation. How touchingly he would have told the sweet story of Jesus and His disciples.— With simplicity and force he would have expounded the great truths of revelation, and often with poetic fire he would have swept the harps of Israel's mighty bards. With words of comfort, and with heavenly charity, he would have entered the humble homes of the poor, and filled them with hope and joy. Like a ministering angel, with messages of glad tidings, he would have stood by the couch of the dying, and then he would have poured the oil of consolution into the wounded hearts to soothe their anguish for the dead. In April, 1861, he discontinued his studies in the Theological Seminary, and joined the playmates of his childhood at Fort Macon. Here, for some time, he was a private in the "Guilford Greys," and he also performed the duties of Chaplain, and acquired the confidence and affection of every soldier. He loved his country with all the ardor of a warm and generous nature, and he promptly and cheerfully discharged his whole duty. He was in the battles of Newbern, Richmond, and Harper's Ferry. He was wounded at Sharpsburg, but still fought on during the whole of that dreadful day. Though sometimes sick, and always weary, he continued with the army in its rapid and toilsome marches.-His tender heart often bled at scenes of carnage, but was never daunted by the presence of danger, for it was "staid on God." With tearful eye he stood by the wounded and dying, and, with ready hand, he performed the acts of brotherly kindness. In days of darkness he was always cheerful and confident of his country's ultimate triumph. The young Christian soldier ended his course at Fredericksburg, and his body now rests by the side of his mother and kindred, in the quiet churchyard at home; and when "the time of the singing of birds is come," many sweet flowers will bloom over ceaseless choir of Cherubi and the Ma. Because H. Seen several accounts of the engagement of forces with the enemy at White Half ridge, and knowing them to be imperfect, and universe, I have concluded to give you the cis as they are, and ask, as a favor that you give them an insertion in your paper, and request the papers of the State to copy. These facts may be unpleasant to some of our forces which should have been engaged, and who have taken great credit for bravery due to others.

Farewell! kind, generous, noble-hearted Sammy! Your brave comrades on the weary march, and by the bivouse fire, will often think of you and your deeds of kindness, love and charity. The companions of your school-boy and college days, will often think of you, and of their sweet communion with your guileless spirit. Loved ones at home have consecrated your grave with many a tear, and as long secrated your grave with many a tear, and as long as their hearts are warm they will misk of you, and often weep for your early doon.

The historien, in compiling a history of this war, will have to depend, in a great measure, sepon our public journals for his material; therefore, it is of the utmost importance that the truth should always be stated in giving an account of an engagement with the enemy for publication. When this is done, the public can give credit to those who are justly entitled to receive it without having to wait for an

The 11th (Bethel) Regiment N. O. T., command-y Col. Collett Leventhorpe, was stationed at Fractin, Va., where, on Sunday the 14th, we re-ceived orders to go to the support of Brig. General Evans, at Kinston, who was there being engaged with a very superior force of Abolitionists, under with a very superior force of Abolitionists, under Gen. Foster. At Weldon we were joined by por-tions of Col. Perebee's and Col. P. G. Evans' Cav-alry regiment, dismounted, under the command of Gen. Robinson. On our arrival at Goldsboro', at midnight, we were met at the Depot by our ener-getic and patriotic Governor, who directed us to lose no time in getting to Kinston. On arriving at Mosely Hall, we were first notified that our forces had fallen back, but before doing so had inflicted great loss on the enemy. As our orders were to report to Gen. Evans, we proceeded to his head-quarters, five miles below Mosely Hall. About day-light on Monday morning, information was received hat a large force of the enemy were proceeding up the opposite bank of the Neuse towards White Hall Bridge. The 11th, Col. Leventhorpe, Col. Ferebee and Col. Evans' Regiments, under the command of Brig. Gen. Robinson, were ordered to proceed thither, burn the bridge and hold them in check. This bridge is ten miles from Mosely Hall and eighten below Goldsboro'. We arrived at the bridge about 5 o'clock, P. M. After a reconnoissance by our commanding officers, it was thought best to destroy the bridge, whereupon, about forty barrels of rosin and turpentine was placed upon it ready for the torch. This had not been done but a few moments before the enemy made their appearance just as the torch was applied. They were evidently much disappointed, as they gave vent to their rage in curses loud and deep. The conflagration of the bridge was one of the most beautiful sights I ever beheld; the river for about two hundred yards was a complete sheet of liquid fire, caused by the large quantity of surpentine floating down from the burning structure.

Company C, Capt. Bird, was ordered on picket duty at the river for the night; the remainder of our forces fell back to a skirt of woods about a haif mile from the river. During the evening we were reinforced by two sections, (4 pieces) from Major Moore's battery. We were enjoying ourselves finely before our camp fires, regaing ourselves on roas-ted sweet potatoes, when the enemy opened upon us and company C, at the river, a terrible discharge of grape, canister and shell, which was kept up very briskly for an hour; they were promptly replied to by our colour company C. Capt. Bird, who were on duty near them at the time. I am sorry to say we had some very fine potatoes destroyed for the want of time to remove them from the fire before we | company as a private, was elected first Lieutenant was done, and in the language of the saintly Abraham, we can truly say, nobody hurt. We were permitted to pass the remainder of the might in peace, and were only interrupted by comprising the peace, and the peace of the peace o pany A, Capt. Hand, being se nt down to the river to support company C, fearing the enemy might make an effort to cross do ring the night.

On Tuesday morning the 18th, company's A, and On Tuesday morning the roth, company S A, and C, were relieved from duty by company B, Capt. Armfield, and company F, Capt. Small. About S o'clock, our picke's opened on the enemy, who were in very large for ce on the opposite bank of the river, distant from one to three bundred yards. In a few moments the ball opened with a terrific discharge of artillery and small arms. Col. Leventhorpe drew up the 12th in line of battle and awaited orders. The 31st was ordered to take position on the river bank, but failed from some cause to do so, whereupon Col. Leventhorpe was ordered to advance, which was promptly done, and in as good order as though it were on battalion drill; they deployed on the river bank and in the swamp, under a more to ous discharge of grape, canister and shell from 18 pieces of artillery and amidst the volleys of small arms from five full brigades of infantry; this was the time to try brave hearts; but the old Bethel was equal to the occasion, and under their brave and cool officers, went forward as though they belonged to Napoleon's old guard. The regiment acted as sharp shooters, and with their Enfield Ri-fles and Rifled English muskets, proceeded to do their duty in fine style, silencing their batteries one by one. After an engagement of five hours, the enemy fell back, leaving quite a number of their dead and wounded on the field.

From the best information which I am able to obtain, the enemy's force consisted of five brigades of infantry and cavalry, and 18 pieces of artilery (from 6 to 33 pounders) and not less than 20,000. Our entire foce did not reach 1,200, and there were only engaged, the Bethel regiment, 600 strong, supported by two pieces of artillery, of Maj. Moore's battery.

Battery.

Brig. Gen. Robinson, as and brave an officer as has yet drawn his sword behalf of Southern Independence, our loss was ery small, considering our position, the numbers engaged, and the distance between our forces, which at no time could have exceeded three hundred yards. We have, however, to mourn the loss of some brave spirits, among them Lieut. Means and Sergt. Bristol.

Enclosed I send you a list of killed and wounded, with the names of their company; also the number killed and wounded of other regimen's who were under fire but not actually engaged. Our total loss was killed 11; mortally wounded 1; and slightly wounded 45; of this number the Bethel regiment lost 7 killed, 1 mortally wounded, and 34 slightly. The enemy, through some of their prisoners, admit a loss in killed and wounded of at least 1,200.

After the enemy's batteries were silenced, and the 11th regiment were withdrawn, the 81st, Col. Jordan was again ordered down to the river and fired a few volleys into the retreating enemy. By day light on Wednesday morning, we were on the march for Goldsboro'. After a tramp of 20 miles, we arrived there just in time to see the Rail Road bridge on the W. & W. Rail Road in flames, and to hear the news that the enemy were in full retreat for

An examination of the battle ground at White Hall bridge next morning, disclosed the fact that the enemy made a hasty retreat, as they left behind about 100 unburied dead, a number of wounded, besides several thousand dollars worth of stores. The 11th is now encamped on the Rail Road with part of Burke county now embraced in the county of McDowell, near "Old Fort" on the Catawba river, on the 23rd day of April, A. D. 1837. He was the younger son of Gen. Alney Burgin, a highly respectable citizen of McDowell county. At an early period in boyhood, he gave evidence of a thoughtful and active mind, and he very soon acquired a fair knowledge of the rudiments of the English language, and, though he never became a finished scholar, he obtained a good practical education. His good sense taught him early in life, the importance of storing his mind with valuable information, and to this end, he devoted much time to the study of history, especially the history of his own country, and general reading. His observation of men and things was large for one of his age, and of men and things was large for one of his age, and more accurate than that of most men at the age of twenty-three years.

Capt. Burgin inherited from his parents, indeed. from a long ancestry, a devoted love of free institu-tions under that system of government established by WASHINGTON and his illustrious compatriots .-Hence, he became at an early day an interested and watchful observer of the political difficulties that led to the existing revolution. He desired to avert a disruption of the late Union, if this could be done upon any plan of honor and safety to his section of the country. With this view, he co-operated with the conservative men of the country, and in 1860 he was induced to become a candidate to represent his native county in the lower branch of the Legislature. Party excitement ran high. The contending parties in his county were about equally divided. He ran against a young gentleman of handsome acilities and great personal popularity, and influential gentleman outside of the county brought their influence to bear against him to the utmost of the ability, but he nevertheless beat his opponent. In the canvass, conducted upon principles of true honor, he displayed an ability and aptitude in debate that gave him permanent reputation and greatly gratified scores of devoted friends. In the Legisla ture, though he did not participate largely in the debates of that body, he never failed to make himself familiar with every subject of importance under consideration, and always voted after deliberation and with mature judgment. He was a useful and efficient member. He stood firmly by the late Union, hoping the good men of the land might be permitted to save it, until Lincoln's proclamation of the land might be the save it. calling for troops to subjugate the South, cut off all hope! Then duty and patriotism, whose commands he never failed to obey, demanded his co operation to establish the independence of the South, and accordingly he labored assiduously and cordially at the first extra session of the Legislature in 1861, to pass such measures as were necessary to enable North-Carolina to join fully and vigorously in the struggle for independence. As soon as this short session closed, he hurried home, joined a volunteer changed our hase. With this exception, no damage of his company and was finally promoted to the Captaincy of the same. He enjoyed the fullest confidence and cordial respect of those under his com-

ning of the revolution in this State, to the day of |. his death, he discharged his duty like a man, a soldier, and a patriot. His company formed part of the gallant regiment commanded, at first, by the no less gallant Col. (now Gen'l.) Pettigrew. Well, and nobly, did Captain Burgin acquit himself in all the bloody conflicts in which his regiment and company were called to participate. His company and regiment went with Gen. Lee's army to Maryland and participated robly in the great battle of Sharpsburg. There Capt. Burgin received a severe wound in the hand, which wholly disqualified him for duty for several weeks. He visited his father's house to receive the affectionate care of devoted parents, but, alas! to return to his corrades in arms no more forever! Through the watchful care of his mother, his wound in the course of a few weeks became nearly well, and he was making preparations to rejoin his command, when a severe attack of fever seized him which terminated his mortal existence at 9 o'clock on Sunday evening, the 80th of November. During the last few days of his life, he suffered intense pain, but midst all his sufferings, he did not forget his friends in the army. Of them he spoke constantly in terms of warm affection.

Alas! that one so young, so promising, should be cut off so soon! But his work is done—well done! His race, though short, is run! Let him rest from his work!

Captain Burgin was a brave and patriotic soldier and citizen, a faithful friend and sincere in all his professions. Hundreds of devoted friends and acquaintances lament his early death. A short while before his death he became sensible that he must soon die, and when the final summons came he

> For the Standard. CAMP RANSON'S BRIGADE, Near Fredericksburg, Va., December 19, 1862.

Mr. EDITOR:-The battle of Saturday, the 18th inst., at Fredericksburg, Va., was one of most desperate and bloody of the present war. From 10 clock, A. M., until the darkness of night closed the bloody drams, the fire of musketry and the booming of artillery were incessant and terrific. The Yankees, aware of the magnitude of the work before them, nerved themselves for the conflict. They fought with unwonted courage. The 24th reg't. N C. troops, under the immediate command of Colonel Wm. J. Clarke, on the night previous to the battle, took position in the front line on the western outof the town and in front of Marge's House. Our left rested on the plank road and our right was supported by the 24th Georgia regiment. Being in front, these two regiments bore the brunt of the battle. Against these the enemy concentrated his principal strength. Regiment after regiment came dashing from the town, with the seeming determination to drive us from our position; but like mist before the morning sun, melted away before the unerring aim and steady valer of our troops. As each successive column had been mowed down, fresh levies came to supply its place. "Thousands filled the space where only hundreds fell." But these, like their comrades who had succeeded them, were either made to bite the dust or flee in dismay at the slaughter of their friends.

Too much praise cannot be given to our brave men for the coolness with which they met and repulsed the desperate charges of the foe. Opposed by a force five times their own, and that, too, composed of the flower of the Federal army, they main-tained their ground with unflinching valor and drove the vandals "in terror and dismay" from the field. The companies of the 24th N. C. regiment which and A, commanded respectively by Lieut. W.m. T. Ellis, Capt. B. Lane, Capt. Jas. S. Evans, Capt. A. A. McIver and Capt. James Holeman. These companies were under a galling fire throughout the day. The remaining companies on the left were engaged only a portion of the time; but when an opportunity was afforded them, they did not let it pass unimproved. In front of their line of battle, where no other troops had fired a shot, 200 of the enemy were made to "sleep the sleep white owns no waking." Though our loss is slight, I regret to report the death of some of North-Carolina's best and bravest sons.

For the Standard. Goldsboro', Dec. 18, 1862. Editor Standard :- The battle of White Hall in Lenoir county, was fought on the 16th. Col. Leventhorpe's, the 11th (Bethel) Reg't N. C. T., mes and repulsed a large force of the enemy, supposed to be 20,000 men, with 20 pieces of artillery. The Reg't was under a terrific fire of shot, shell, can nister and grape for three and a half hours, when the artillery withdrew and a sharp fire of musketry was kept up for four hours longer. Two sections of Maj. Moore's artillery, Capt. Badham's battery, commanded by Lt. McCleese and Lt. J. M. Jones Jr., replied to the enemy's guns, firing some 300 shots. The 31st Reg't N. C. Troops, Col. J. V. Jordan, were under the fire, but not engaged. The action was commenced and kept up for hours by detachments from company F, Capt. E. A. Small, from Chowan, and company B, Capt. M. D. Armfield, from Burke. These detachments fired over thirty rounds. The rest of the regiment was then ordered forward, and amid a terrific fire was led up in splendid order, by Col. Leventhorpe, and took its position on the bank of the river. The following is a correct list of the casualties in the 11th Reg't., with the commanders who led them into the action:

Company A - Capt W. L. Hand, from Mecklenburg county, went into action with 76 men-no casualties.

Company B-Capt. M. D. Armfield, from Burk county, went in with — men. Killed: 1st Serg E B Bristol, private W Duckworth. Wounded Privates J Correll, A Loven, A Morrison, H Shut fler, A P Warlick.

For the Standard. GOLDSBORO, N. C., Dec. 22, 1862. Mr. EDITOR: - Knowing the deep interest you feel in our brave Raleigh boys now battling in their country's cause, I write this to call to your atten-tion the heroic conduct of Lieutenant McKee, in the disastrous affair at Kinston, during the early part of the week. Mailett's battalion deserves and has received much praise for the bravery with which they repulsed heavy forces of the enemy on that occasion-lut they were finally forced to retire, and arriving at the bridge, found it enveloped in flames and many of them surrendered themselves prisoners. But young McKee, full of ardor, made another effort to escape, and was successful. Under the heavy fire of the enemy he retreated up the South bank of the river, and having collected twenty one others engaged in the same undertaking, he forced his way through the Yankee pickets, and arrived safely in Goldsboro'. Sometimes he and his gallant party were before the enemy, who were rapidly advancing up the South bank of the river, and at other times behind them. They suffered much from the cold, being without blankets, and having many times to sleep in swamps so close to the enemy that they durst not light a fire. His is a fine example for the young men of our army.— When all hope seemed lost, his daring and intre-pidity saved himself and companions, and they are now prepared for the engagements that are soon to follow. How many could do likewise, and how much better our army would fare, though some in-dividuals were to suffer, if his example were oftener

With continued feelings of friendship and esteem, I am sir, yours,

For the Standard. GOLDSBORO', Dec. 24, 1862. Mr. Epiron:-While other bodies of men have found their eulogists, the battalion commanded by me seems to have been entirely overlooked in accounts of the recent fights in and around Kinston, and in the vicinity of Goldsboro'. In every fight, and in the very hottest of it, portions of the battalion were engaged. Saturday, 13th Decemberation section of Starr's battery and Bunting's battery were across the river in the engagement of that day, nobly endeavoring to stem the onward tide of an overwhelming force. The same day four companies of the command, and four pieces of Starr's battery were at the batteries below Kinston to repulse the enemy's gunbeats, should they attempt to ascend the river and co-operate with his land forces. Capt. Manney's single gun and one howitzer of Starr's battery, skillfully worked by Lieut. J. Wetmore, were found sufficient; the only boat of the enemy which dared to appear, retiring disabled, in ess than fifteen minutes. Sunday, the 14th-Bunting's battery and Starr's gun were engaged across the river and at the bridge. None will gainsay the coolness of the officers and men working there, nor the efficiency of their fire.

The mer at the entrenchments having been entirely cut off from Gen. Evans by the interposition of the main body of the enemy, the Battalion was formed at 4 o'clock, P. M., and in perfect order, commenced a retreat, via Snow Hill, reaching Goldsboro', at 10 P. M., Monday.

At daybreak, Tuesday, Battalion was in position on North bank of Neuse, prepared to resist any attempt of the enemy to cross the river. In the fight, Wednesday, the entire command, except Bunting's battery, was under fire during the day, and did, probably, as much damage to the enemy, as all our other forces combined.

Bunting's battery was in the engagement at White Hall, and nobly sustained, during the day, the reputation of the Battalion. The loss of the command has been six killed, and twenty wounded.

Very respectfully, S. D. POOL.

COTTON AND WOOLEN CARDS. Mr. HOLDEN: What are we to do to supply the increasing demand for Cotton and Woolen Cards? This is a question of the greatest importance, and demands the prompt action of the Legislature, if it is within the bounds of possibility for that body to do any thing to procure them.

Next to food, raiment is indispensable. The action of the State in devising means to procure food for the destitute, has met with the unanimous sanction of the people. One more step in the direction of procuring clothing, at least for the present, and the way is clear; for, with the necessary facilities. our people, by their own labor, can clothe them-selves at home, and at least one-half of the army. But, to do this, Cotton and Wool Cards must be procured. How this is to be done is the question; all attempts hitherto made having failed. I have some knowledge of the nature of the machinery necessary. It is delicate and sensitive, but simple and cheap. With a pattern to work by it can be made by any of our practical machinists, at a cost of not more than a first class sewing machine. There is nothing more simple than the process of making wire. I consider it entirely practicable to manufac-ture a supply in N. C. I understand there is an establishment in successful operation in Georgia. 1 would suggest that an appropriation he made, and placed in the hands of the Governor for that purpose; that he select some suitable person to go to Georgia and examine the establishment, and obtain all the information possible on the subject, and report back to him, and if the enterprise is deemed practicable, to enter into it with all possible dispatch. If this, however, should fail, with the means at hand, they can be procured in a different way. Owing to the cheapness of cotton and woolen fabrics, the Wheel and Cards had, in a great degree, been laid aside for years. When the war came on, the article being but little in demand, the supply in the hands of the merchants was quite limited, and only brought 40 cents; now they are selling from $25 to $80 a pair, and can't be had at that It is useless to think of individual enterprise taking hold of this thing now, as men of means can find a nearer cut to get gain in the field of speculation than this. If we will manufacture the cards, and let them have them, they will then take hold. J. A. McM. South Lowell, N. C.
